School Board Meets, Revises Calendar

Fire Dept. Sponsoring 'Red Ball'

"Operation Red Ball" is being kicked off by the Cameron Volunteer Firemen for marking homes of the elderly, invalids, or homes with small children.

Sponsored by American Red Ball and the fire department, the program's aim is to place a red circle sticker on every home in which invalids, elderly, or small children live.

Anyone desiring a sticker may contact one of the firemen or go by the fire station where the stickers will be given out. They should be placed on the upper center of the front door to provide easy and fast recognition and another sticker should be placed on the window as near the center as possible of the invalid or elderly person's bedroom.

The stickers were obtained from the Copperas Cove fire department, which lists a number of Central Texas cities that are using the program including Copperas Cove, Killeen, Belton, Temple, Gatesville, Little River, Jonesboro, Bartlett, Harker Heights, Nolanville, Troy, Rogers, Salado, Holland and Lampasas.

House Boosts Press 9 to 1

The Texas House is reporting out open meetings and press shield laws to the Texas Senate with more than 9 to 1 margins favoring more open public meetings and press shield legislation.

This says to the Senate that people are interested in this reform legislation for the press. And the Senate is not likely to amend the substance of the House legislation too much.

Sharpstown is still closer than a memory away. And Price Daniel, Jr., and the 130 plus voting for these proposals obviously agree with press leaders and the working press that access to public information will best serve the Texas reader and viewer.

We applaud the response to real need in this state and nation for strengthening the First Amendment when it seems to be suffering cracks that could, unless reinforced by legislation, become serious faultlines in this country's foundation.

Land Shortage Creates Urging For Cremation

By Jose Katigbak

Hong Kong, where scarcity of land is sending the cost of dying soaring, the government is urging its people to cremate rather than bury their dead.

With little enough room on the island for the living, lines are often developing for final resting places for the dead. The situation looks like it will get worse before it gets better.

According to Chin Yiu-Cheung, assistant supervisor of Hong Kong's cemeteries and crematoriums, the islands wealthy sometimes "store" their dead relatives in mortuaries for weeks on end waiting for choice burial sites.

Hong Kong has 11 public and 28 private cemeteries to handle an average annual death toll of 20,000. But many of them are near bursting point already and at least two have been closed down in recent months because of over-crowding.

Space is so precious that many cemeteries exhumate graves at the end of a six-year cycle to make room for others. The dug-up remains are re-buried in small urns.

Because of the increasing number of human remains which have to be exhumed every year, the government has started work on expanding its main cemetery—the Wo Hop Shek grounds near the Chinese border—to provide 6,000 additional urn burial spaces.

In addition to the cemeteries there are four crematoriums in the colony, three of which are run privately.

Although reclamation work has succeeded in adding more land area to Hong Kong, this has inevitably been used for high rise apartments or office buildings. Meanwhile cemetery fees have gone up by as much as 50% in the past few years.

According to Chin, permanent plots in private cemeteries cost from about 280 to 360 dollars for adults and about 140 to 275 for children.

Temporary burial sites—those subject to exhumation after a six-year period—cost from 10 to 27 dollars.

Grave spaces in government cemeteries cost anything from 50 cents to 37 dollars.

In comparison, cremation fees come to only about five dollars and there are no upkeep costs to worry about.

The grave-space situation was not so acute before because a number of people exported the remains of their relatives to China for burial. But because of increasing amounts of rad tape instituted by the communist authorities on the mainland, this practice has died out completely.

Hong Kong's increasing affluence has also brought a steady erosion of traditional Chinese ideas on burial.

According to Chin, the governments efforts to popularize cremation by publicizing its benefits have resulted in the numbers cremated rising from 448 in 1962 to 3,015 in 1971.

But female embalmer Kong Kam Chi disputes China's claim that the rising figures show cremation is gaining popularity.

Miss Kong, an embalmer for 30 years and reputed to be the only woman practicing the profession, claims, "People who use cremation are those who can't afford a decent burial for their dead."

"Although cremation is cheaper, most people still prefer good old-fashioned burials," she stresses.

Wonder Woman Is New Symbol

By Peter Kiernan

NEW YORK
Wonder Woman is back on Paradise Island from whence she came and all is well in the world of the comic-strip Amazon, created in 1941, by a psychologist-reformer and now dusted off as a symbol of liberated woman.

The psychologist, William Moulton Marston, writing as Charles Moulton, conceived far in advance of the women's liberation movement a character to rival Superman—an Amazon with star-spangled hotpants who could "Pow, zonk, crunch, zap and Whap" her way through armies of villains.

But Marston made clear in the first issue of Wonder Woman that equal rights for women were very much on his heroine's mind.

"In fact," said Joanne Edgar, an editor for Ms. Magazine, which started the Wonder Woman revival, "Marston believed women were superior to men—and that is not what women's liberation is all about."

Marston, who was also a lawyer and worked for prison reform, felt that woman is the sum of love plus force whereas man, using force without love "Brings evil and unhappiness."

In one sequence, Wonder Woman, musing on man's strength, reflects that "It's sort of thrilling—but isn't it more fun to make the man obey?"

Generally, though, throughout the 1940's Wonder Woman confined herself to flying about in her invisible plane, dealing out justice and sometimes reforming villains that invaded all the comics of the time.

Marston died in 1947 and while Wonder Woman lived on her character was handled differently. By 1968, she was dressed in boutique fashions, acted pretty much like any other super adventure of the James Bond ilk, and sales had slumped badly.

Miss Edgar wrote an article on Wonder Woman for Ms. last year. "The response was fantastic," she said, and Ms. decided to publish in book form a selection of the original Marston chronicles.

As well as the original comics, the $12.95 volume which came out this month contains a brief history of Amazons in myth.

Offenders Get Work, Not Fine

By Richard Norsworthy

LONDON

Until a couple of weeks ago, 20 year old Peter Giles, found guilty of possessing marijuana, might have found himself in a jail cell or paying a hefty fine.

But under a new act incorporated this year into Britain's penal laws, Giles is sweeping roads and picking up litter. He is the first offender to be affected by a scheme under which magistrates can order anyone over the age of 17 to do community service work instead of paying a fine or going to jail.

Giles was ordered to work for 120 hours without pay. Magistrates can order offenders to work from 40 to 240 hours a year on projects such as painting and decorating for needy families or the physically handicapped, maintenance work at youth centers and playgrounds, clearing rubbish and sweeping roads, and nature conservation tasks.

The scheme is experimental and Nottingham, where Giles is working, is one of six centers across the country where it is being tried.

A government spokesman said the scheme is aimed primarily at young offenders and applicable purely at the discretion of magistrates. "They must judge for themselves the type of person they are dealing with," he said.

Breach of a community service order carries a maximum fine of $125 and the offender may then face serving a jail sentence for the original offense.

But while British law for minor offenders has been softened, penalties for other offenders have been increased.

The governments' concern over the growing use of firearms, especially in robberies, is reflected in tougher sentences when guns are used in a crime.

The penalty for possessing a firearm with intent to endanger life and using a firearm to resist arrest is increased from 14 years to life imprisonment.

Other changes in the penal system will allow courts to order crooked businessmen to compensate their victims, and landlords who unlawfully evict or harass tenants face stiffer fines and prison sentences.

Offenders convicted of serious crimes may have property they have used for the purposes of crime confiscated.

But the most ambitious new section of the criminal justice act is the community service order. And Giles, the first offender to be ordered to roll up his sleeves and work for the community, is unhappy with it.

Giles, a university student, said: "I asked them to let me do work for people like hospital patients or the mentally handicapped. Now they say I've got to do menial tasks."

But he received no sympathy from Lord Donaldson, chairman of the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders and a leading supporter of the community work experiment.

Take Care In Using Help

Taxpayers seeking professional help in filing their 1972 Federal income tax returns should select only qualified and reputable advisors.

Even though someone else may prepare his return, the taxpayer is responsible for all entries and supporting documents, and for the full payment of additional tax, penalties, and interest. A. P. Andrews, Administrative Officer of Internal Revenue, Temple, said today.

While most tax practitioners are competent and honest, taxpayers were alerted to these potential danger signals:

Beware of the "expert" who will not be around to answer questions after the return has been prepared and filed;

Never sign a blank return and leave it with a stranger;

Do not sign a tax return prepared in pencil, since the return can be changed later;

Avoid the advisor who "guarantees" refunds, wants percentage of the refund, or supposedly knows all the angles, and

Be on your guard if it is suggested that your refund check to mailed to the practitioner's address.

See that the person who prepares your return signs it and includes his address in the space provided.

Japan Ready To Extend Official Aid To Indochina

By Yuko Nakaminkado
TOKYO

Japan is ready to extend all forms of official and private economic aid for reconstruction in Indochina now that a Vietnam cease-fire agreement has been reached.

But moves are likely to be cautious, in view of criticism of Japan's rapid economic inroads into the United States, European and Asian Markets.

Japan at present has diplomatic relations only with South Vietnam, but is ready to establish ties with the north as well, should the separate existence of the two states be confirmed.

Opposition and pacifists who condemned Japan's alleged cooperation in the Vietnam war through the U.S. Japan security treaty are now expected to step up demands for abrogation of the treaty and removal of U. S. military bases in Japan.

They claim the reason for both treaty and bases has been lost with the cease-fire, which followed Japan's normalization of relations with China as well as U. S. rapprochement with the Soviet Union and China.

Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, in welcoming the cease-fire, said Japan's international responsibility would be greater than before and she would do her best to live up to overseas expectations.

During the campaign for last December's general elections he proposed the establishment of an Asia-Pacific conference to discuss ways and means to preserve peace in the region.

The scheme is one of several Indochina plans now under government study.

Foreign Minister Masayoshi Ohira said earlier this month that Japan would increase its bilateral aid to Indochina immediately after a cease-fire was signed and was ready to participate in multilateral aid programs.

He said the government had earmarked $760 million as a reserve fund in the national budget for the 1973 fiscal year starting in April - which is yet to be approved by Parliament - from which contributions to any multilateral plan might be drawn.

The reserve fund is normally used for domestic needs such as relief in the event of natural disasters and accidents.

The government has also appropriated 3.5 million dollars in the budget to help refugees and war sufferers in North and South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos in the form of medical and food supplies.

Official Japanese survey teams are likely to go to Indochina soon for feasibility studies on projects there.

Japan has so far made commitments to four projects which might have helped war activities.

Japanese enterprises have also expressed their readiness for positive cooperation to both South and North Vietnam to help reduce trade imbalance.

Against the background of the Vietnam cease-fire, the United States has agreed to return or incorporate its military bases in Japan, to the relief of the government which had been caught between its obligation to the security treaty and an anti-base sentiment of local residents and pacifists.

But, opposition parties claim integration of U. S. bases means concentration of forces into key air and naval bases - maintaining U.S. military capability and still keeping Japan a key strategic base for American forces.

The opposition, claiming that tension in Asia has eased, is determined to continue to fight to abrogate the treaty, remove all military bases and the 64,000 U. S. servicemen on Japanese soil, and force cancellation of the governments' plan to double Japanese defense spending in the next five years.

Both the Tokyo and Washington government, however, feel the treaty, bases and Japanese defense build-up are necessary contributions to the growing moves towards stability and detente in Asia.

French Alps Missing Snow

By David Lawday
GRENOBLE

Unless a sudden snowfall saves the day, the ski industry in the French Alps is facing its greatest catastrophe of the century.

An almost unprecedented dearth of snow this season has so far left some of Europe's most celebrated ski runs more suitable for horseback riding and hiking than for skiing.

A bare six inches of snow covers the slopes even as high as the 6,500 feet mark. Below 5,500 feet, and altitude that usually provides a luxuriant cushion of snow, grass and rocks are the most prominent features this winter.

Renowned resorts like Chamonix, Courchevel, Megève, Saint Gervais, Val d'Isère and Chamrousse have all been badly hit.

The lack of snow comes at a particularly worrying time for the French ski industry because it was only this year that it decided to mount a major campaign to win its proper share of the lucrative European winter sports market.

Statistics show that France owns one-third of the skiing terrain in the entire European alpine area, far more than Italy which comes second in the land-owning list and nearly twice as much as third-placed Austria.

But both Austria and Switzerland attract more winter sports enthusiasts than the two million who spend their holidays in France each year.

For all the well organized campaign to ship in more tourists from the United States, Japan and the rest of Europe, the one factor that escaped the promoters was snow.

The French pride themselves on their advanced system of ski lifts and mountain cablecars. The life operators are the biggest victims this season.

For nine of 10 lift operators, the loss of business has been in the order of 100 per cent, according to reports reaching this alpine center.

Even high-altitude operators have suffered a 30 per cent loss.

Ski hire concerns report a 60 per cent loss, receipts from local sales of ski trousers, gloves and hats have fallen by the same amount.

The ski instructors or "Moniteurs," usually the proud lords of the slopes at this time of the year, are earning next to nothing.

A few instructors are giving lessons at very high altitudes but many have resigned themselves to staying in their less glamorous out-of-season jobs as laborers.

Doctors are the only locals unperturbed by the business fall-off, though hospitals report a big drop in the number of broken legs, arms and wrists.

Local authorities say the snow situation has not been as disastrous since 1902

Airmen Learned Survival In Jungle Clad Mountains

By Ian Pedley

PHILIPPINES

The survival of hundreds of U. S. airmen downed in Indochina may have hinged on lessons they learned in the jungle - clad mountains west of this big American base.

Since August 1965, five months after the late President Lyndon Johnson sent U. S. combat troops into South Vietnam, all American fliers deployed to Southeast Asia have undergone a course of survival techniques here.

Maj. James Muse, commander of the 3614th. Combat Crew Training Squadron, said Monday that more than 700 airmen recovered after being downed in Indochina were graduates of the school.

The airmen begin their four-day course with lectures on survival techniques and study of jungle flora and fauna.

A small zoo at the school's on-base headquarters contains many of the animals and reptiles which downed airmen could encounter in the jungles of Southeast Asia.

Among the caged exhibits are two Malayan bears, one a former beer - drinking mascot of U. S. troops in South Vietnam, a wild pig and monkeys.

Also on display are a varety of poisonous snakes found in the region such as the bamboo viper, the oriental coral snake and various types of cobras.

Muse said snakes were one of the biggest fears for downed airmen, who were taught to identify species so their worries could be assuaged if confronted by a harmless snake.

Caged birds are also kept to teach identification of their night noises, another major source of fear to airmen downed in strange and hostile territory.

Numerous species of trees and plants also flourish at the school for airmen to recognize possible water and food sources and the poisonous varieties.

But the highlight of the course is on the third day when the trainees are taken by truck to the foot of the nearby Zambales Range, about 50 miles north of Manila, and later lifted by helicopter to higher ground.

Muse said the airmen spent a night in the jungle to give them self-confidence in handling the problems they would face if downed in action.

Aboriginal Filipinos are used as "aggressors" to give the airmen a sense of being hunted down.

Evasive tactics were taught as well as other more rudimentary measures such as how to light a fire with two pieces of bamboo - the course record is just over one minute.

Muse, who is also a fighter pilot, said although the average time for recovery of airmen downed over Vietnam was only two and a half hours, many of those destined for longer periods in the jungle owed their survival to the training course.

He said some downed airmen were not recovered might have lasted out until rescue was at hand had radio contact not been lost. Batteries for the radios carried by all U. S. fliers had a maximum life of just two weeks if used sparingly.

Muse said the school was proud of its record that out of the more than 700 recovered fliers who had passed through the survival course, only one could be considered to have "cracked up."

He was recovered in a state of shock still hanging from his parachute, Muse added.

Bentson Introduces Bill To Protect Newsmen

WASHINGTON

Senator Lloyd Bentson today introduced legislation to permit newsmen to protect the confidentiality of their sources of information.

"The men who framed our Constitution understood clearly the necessity for a free Press, to inform the public about the activities of their government without fear of reprisal," Bentson said.

"But, I am sorry to say that not all politicians, not all government officials of today see that as clearly. And because of that, this legislation is required."

"Most of us," Senator Bentson continued, "take occasional exception to some of the reporting that is done. The reporting is not always fair or objective, and it is sometimes far from accurate."

"But even when it falls short of fairness, objectivity or accuracy, we must insist that the Press be free, and this bill is designed to help assure that it remains free."

Bentson's bill would permit newsmen to decline to divulge their confidential

Under the spur of new antipollution laws, industrial firms in West Germany are rediscovering the truth of an old adage, "Where there's much there's money."

An aluminum smelting firm in Ludwigshafen is making roofing tiles out of "red mud" which was formerly dumped into unsightly piles or simply pumped into rivers.

A factory at Springe, near Hanover, is processing domestic refuse to construct prefabricated building slabs. Another factory at Blaubeuren, near Ulm, is converting household and domestic rubbish into rich organic humus to improve poor soil. In Ludwigshafen, Giulini Chemie, a 150 - year - old family firm with 2,700 employees, has made research into environmental protection a major part of its activities.

The optimal solution of the pollution problem is recycling waste by-products into the production process or converting them into new products, explained Dr. Udo Giulini, the head of the company, who is also a member of the West German Parliament.

The "red mud" left behind by the extraction of aluminum oxide has always been a particular nuisance in the bauxite industry.

After intensive research the Giulini chemists have developed three processes which promise to solve the disposal problem in the future.

High grade tiles for the building industry are now being produced from red mud waste, and the firm claims they are far less liable to breakage than normal tiles.

Experiments have also shown that crude iron can be won from red mud by putting it through a foundry. But perhaps the most interesting use for it is in manufacturing a flaky substance which can be used for chemically cleaning heavily polluted waste water.

The material acts as a catalyst by turning very fine dirt into larger particles which can easily be extracted from the water by mechanical means.

The system is said to have proved its worth already in purifying industrial and municipal waste water. A large-scale experiment is now planned to purify a Bavarian lake.

A second waste material, which has hitherto been discarded and has been a major pollution hazard in water, is waste plaster.

Giulini chemists have succeeded in using waste plaster to produce prefabricated wall panels which they claim are harder, lighter and cheaper than walls made of natural plaster.

Licenses to manufacture the material developed by the Giulini process have been granted to firms in Australia, Belgium, Canada and the United States.

Another firm at Springe is producing pre-stressed hardboard out of the ordinary contents of household garbage cans. A wide range of refuse can be used in this process -- kitchen scraps and leftovers, packing materials, broken crockery and glass, tin cans, ashes, street scavengings and even discarded wood and furniture.

The whole lot is crushed in a hammer mill, fermented and treated in a special drying plant by hot air. The product is a dry fibre raw material with a very low moisture content of under five per cent.

The process destroys all micro-organisms so that the end product is absolutely sterile. Stones, glass and metal particles are extracted and the fibrous material can be bonded chemically and converted into finished products in the same way as other conventional raw materials.

Scientists Track Earthquake Sites

By Peter Kiernan

NEW YORK

A group of American scientists is tracking the activity of earthquakes, the most devastating of natural phenomena, over thousands of miles in the hope of soon being able to predict where the fearsome eruptions will occur.

Dr. John Kelleher of the Lamont-Doherty Geological Observatory, one of a team of three scientists who have been tracking earthquake activity through historical records to locate probable eruption sites along the Pacific rim from Chile to Japan warned that:

"The system is not reliable or accurate enough to warrant any social changes at this time."

He said he and his colleagues, Dr. Lynn Sykes and Dr. Jack Oliver, are basing their approach to earthquake prediction on a Russian system which was first used in the 1960s.

He said they were the only western scientists following through on the Russian observations, which entail selecting sites in earthquake prone areas where there have been no eruptions for some time.

Through a study of the history of quake activity they have determined many areas in South America, California, Alaska and Japan where major earthquakes are possible "within the coming several decades."

The scientists concentrate their seismic detection equipment in these regions, hoping to learn more about the sort of activity which precedes an earthquake.

"We obviously couldn't concentrate instruments around the entire Pacific rim," said Dr. Kelleher. "But by the process of elimination -- ruling out areas where there has been recent activity -- we are able to select likely sites."

He said the study was based on the existence of "tectonic plates" which were first postulated in the late 1960s and which he described as a "breakthrough in understanding" of earthquake activity.

According to the theory, there exist at a depth of 50 to 70 miles beneath the earth several gigantic plates, covering the globe, which Dr. Kelleher likened to icebergs, slowly moving in the sea.

"When one plate slips beneath another, we have an earthquake," he explained.

The Pacific rim has been known for years to have a number of long faults, or fractures in the earth's crust, extending almost around the entire Pacific Ocean, in some places under the ocean and in others beneath land.

The faults are believed to mark the border of the plates, the area where they rub together and in which volcanic activity as well as earthquakes is located.

There are believed to be five or six plates involved in the activity in the Pacific rim

Cuisine A La Creole
Stands Test Of Time

When the French invented cuisine a la Creole, they began a whole new era of dining. The old cuisine artists developed methods of cooking that have stood the test of time and are well loved today.

Shrimp Creole is an old-time favorite that can be prepared easily and economically in your home. Economically? Yes -- for though the price per pound of shrimp is high, the dish can be stretched to serve six persons.

Cindy Gary, home economist for the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department hopes you'll try this recipe soon, and then write for more recipes to "Seafood," Texas Parks and Wildlife Department, John H. Reagan Bldg., Austin, Texas 78701.

SHRIMP CREOLE
1 pound raw, cleaned shrimp
1 large onion, chopped
2 cloves garlic, chopped
1 green bell pepper, chopped
1/2 cup chopped celery
1/4 cup chopped parsley
1 tbsp. bacon drippings
1 can (6 oz.) tomato paste
1 can (1 lb.) tomatoes
1 cup water
1 tsp. chili powder
1 tsp. sugar
1 tsp. sugar
1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
1 bay leaf
1 tsp. gumbo file
1 tsp. salt (or to taste)
1/4 tsp. pepper dash cayenne pepper, optional
Saute onion, garlic, celery, green pepper, and parsley in fat. Add tomatoes, tomato paste, water, chili powder, sugar, Worcestershire sauce, bay leaf, salt, pepper and cayenne. Simmer slowly about one hour. Add raw shrimp and gumbo file; cook three to five minutes more. Serve immediately over fluffy white rice. Makes six servings.

The case of the disappearing paycheck and what to do about it.

Some people learn the hard way. Paychecks disappear fast. Day-to-day living expenses eat up a lot. And maybe part goes in the savings account for this year's vacation or another immediate goal. A good chunk of that money seems to disappear by itself. So it's no wonder that when it comes to long-term goals, or when an emergency comes up, there simply aren't funds to meet the need. Unless there was a nest egg building up all that time. A good way to build that nest egg is with U.S. Savings Bonds. The easy way to buy them is to sign up for the Payroll Savings Plan where you work. An amount you specify will be set aside from your paycheck and used to buy Bonds. And while you're going through grocery bills, car repairs, vacation weekends, kids' toys and nights out on the town, you'll know you're saving money too. That's good to know.

Now E Bonds pay 5 1/2% interest when held to maturity of 5 years, 10 months (4% the first year). Bonds are replaced if lost, stolen, or destroyed. When needed they can be cashed at your bank. Interest is not subject to state or local income taxes, and federal tax may be deferred until redemption.

MR. BUSINESSMAN:

IF THERE REALLY IS NO NEED FOR CONTINUOUS ADVERTISING -

MINISTERS

SHOULD PREACH ONLY ONE SERMON OR SO PER YEAR. PEOPLE ARE AGAINST SIN ANYWAY SO WHY RAP ABOUT IT.

TRAFFIC LIGHTS

SHOULD BE TURNED OFF AT DANGEROUS INTERSECTIONS TO SAVE ELECTRICITY. EVERYBODY SHOULD KNOW IT'S A DANGEROUS SPOT AND THAT OUGHT TO BE SUFFICIENT.

HIGHWAY POLICE

SHOULD STOP DRIVING UP AND DOWN THE HIGHWAYS. NO NEED TO CAUTION DRIVERS BY PATROLLING HIGHWAYS. DRIVERS KNOW THE LAW AND ALWAYS OBEY IT.

TEACHERS

SHOULD NOT REVIEW LESSONS. TELL CHILDREN JUST ONCE AND THEY WILL NEVER FORGET.

BUT

IF YOU ARE ONE OF THE FOOLISH KIND-LIKE THE NOTRE DAME CATHEDRAL THAT HAS STOOD FOR SIX CENTURIES BUT CONTINUES TO RING THE BELL EVERY DAY TO LET PEOPLE KNOW IT IS STILL THERE - AND BELIEVE IN CONTINUOUS PROFITABLE ADVERTISING, THEN YOUR ADVERTISING BELONGS IN ---
